Trees along the BeltLine grow livable neighborhoods

The Atlanta BeltLine Arboretum grows more beautiful, useful and appreciated with each passing year.

Thousands of trees are already casting cool shade along the pathways of the linear arboretum that will eventually weave through and connect dozens of Atlanta neighborhoods along a 22-mile route. It serves the diverse communities along its route as a park, an urban forest, a transportation corridor, wildlife refuge, pollinator haven and a vibrant, lively gathering place.

Planted and maintained by Trees Atlanta, the BeltLine Arboretum has recently achieved Level II Accreditation. Walking its winding paths is a delight for us, thanks to many of its trees having originated at our nursery. From liners sold to customers in the Southeast, they were grown on for sale to Trees Atlanta (www.TreesAtlanta.org). During a recent walk along the BeltLine trail, we spotted Snowcone® Snowbells, Continental Appeal™ Lindens, Bald Cypress, Princeton Elms, Redpointe® Maples and these outstanding cultivars currently offered for sale.

October Glory® Maples are gloriously dark green and fresh-looking at the end of a long hot summer. These were grown from our liners by Bold Spring Nursery, a major supplier of trees to the project.

Green Gable™ Tupelo, an introduction of Bold Spring Nursery, is notable for its narrowly upright growth habit and clean, dark green foliage.

Swamp White Oak thrives along the BeltLine trail near Historic Fourth Ward Park, where it will one day shade bicycle riders and pedestrians.

Red Rage® Tupelo is a standout among Nyssa sylvatica cultivars. Its foliage is dark green and glossy despite the city's blistering-hot summer that numbered more than 85 days of temperatures over 90 °F.
